Places Visited

The Hoover Building

Built in 1932 in Perivale Middlesex, Wallis, Gilbert and Partners' tour de force is possibly the finest Art Deco structure in Britain. Now sensitively preserved as a Tesco's supermarket, and an office building for Gallaghers, its principle building is a two storey low-lying white structure with its front divided into 15 bays by massive Egyptian pillars with ornate designs on the tops and bottoms. Its outstanding central doorway has over the door is a huge sunray like design with touches of red, blue, green and golden arrow quills; and matching gates of ornate metalwork. The towers at either end have curved corner windows and sunbursts and arrow quill features. To the left of the factory is what was the canteen, its style reminiscent of a streamlined Odeon cinema. Interior features include a green marble tiled factory washroom and toilets, magnificent art deco stairways and floor to ceiling sunburst windows.

66, Portland Place

Standing on the corner of Portland Place and Weymouth Street near to London's Regents Park, 66 Portland Place is an impressive Art Deco office building serving as the headquarters of the Royal Institute of British Architects (RIBA). Much like Charles Rennie Mackintosh, architect Grey Wornum worked closely with his artist wife to design the RIBA headquarters building.

BBC's 1930s Broadcasting House

Designed by Colonel Val Myer, Broadcasting House is the first ever purpose-built broadcast centre in the UK. It was built in 1932 for the BBC, ten years after the corporation first came into existence in 1922. It is an iconic building, a jewel of Art Deco design, celebrated on its opening as 'the new Tower of London' (The Architectural Review) and much loved by generations of producers and general public alike.

Florin Court

Built in 1936 by Guy Morgan and Partners, Florin Court (better known to Poirot fans as Whitehaven Mansions) is a delightfully modern(e) addition to the mish mash of architectural styles to be found in historic Charterhouse Square. The ten-storey block of flats was built in 1935-37 (almost the exact scope of the television series chronology) for Charterhouse Ltd by architects Guy Morgan & Partners and builders J. Gerrard & Sons. The building cost was apparently about £47,000 at the time. In 1988, the block was refurbished and modernised for Regalian Properties at a cost of about £2 million by architects Hildebrand & Glicker. That was when the building acquired its current name, Florin Court.

Eltham Palace

Admire the stunning domed entrance hall at Eltham Palace, where prestigious guests gathered for glamorous cocktail parties. Socialites and politicians, royals and artists all enjoyed hospitality here. This eye-catching room is a mix of Art Deco and cutting-edge Swedish design. Saved from decline by the Courtaulds', their lavish home is one of the finest examples of Art Deco architecture and design surviving in Britain today.
