Places Visited

Guildhall Museum, Sandwich

From priceless documents to Roman relics, ancient coins and gold insignia to the town's role as a safe haven, the newly refurbished Sandwich Guildhall Museum offer visitors a unique opportunity to appreciate and admire the fascinating story of this ancient Cinque Port town. There's also a very rare opportunity to see one of the most celebrated documents in history - the Magna Carta - together with its sister document, the Charter of the Forest dating from 1300.

Dover Castle

Commanding the shortest sea crossing between England and the continent, Dover Castle has a long and immensely eventful history. Known as the 'key to England', this great fortress has played a crucial role in the defence of the realm for over nine centuries, a span equalled only by the Tower of London and Windsor Castle. The chalk of Castle Hill has been shaped and reshaped over the centuries into massive earthworks, ditches and mounds. Imposing walls and towers have been raised and networks of tunnels excavated beneath them. Henry II began the building of the present castle in the 1180s, and ever since its buildings and defences have been adapted to meet the changing demands of weapons and warfare. Within the walls of the medieval castle stands a much older building, dating from a time when Britain was an outpost of the Roman Empire. The Romans built a lighthouse here after they invaded in AD 43, to guide ships into the harbour. The Dover pharos is now one of only three Roman lighthouses to survive from the whole of the former Roman Empire. It is also the most complete standing Roman building in England.

Hythe

As an important Cinque Port Hythe once possessed a bustling harbour which, over the course of 300 years, has now disappeared due to silting. Hythe was the central Cinque Port, sitting between Hastings and New Romney to the west and Dover and Sandwich to the east. According to Edward Hasted, a French fleet approached Hythe in 1293 and landed 200 men, but "the townsmen came upon them and slew every one of them: upon which the rest of the fleet hoisted sail and made no further attempt". The Royal Military Canal runs across the northern edge of Romney Marsh, to Winchelsea. The canal, intended to repel invasion during the Napoleonic wars of 1804 to 1815, gives central Hythe its character. The canal begins at Seabrook and runs through Hythe. It follows the original Hythe harbour, across Romney Marsh to Winchelsea.

St Leonards Church, Hythe

The large 11th-century church is up the hill; the chancel, from 1220, covers a processional ossuary (a bone store, more commonly found on the continent) lined with skulls and thigh bones which date from the mediaeval period, probably having been stored after removal, to make way for new graves. This was common in England, but bones were usually dispersed, and this is thus a rare collection. Several of the skulls show marks of trepanning. This is one of only two surviving ossuaries in England. The collection consists of shelves in four arched bays that contain 1,022 skulls in total, and a single stack of bones and skulls measuring 7.5m in length, 1.8m in width and just over 1.8m in height. The stack of bones was reassembled on its brick base in 1910.

Rye Castle Museum – Ypres Tower

The Ypres Tower is thought to have been built in the early 14th century as part of the town's defences and is the second oldest building open to the public in Rye. (The oldest is St Mary's church.) The Tower has had a chequered history and as you look round the inside you can see some of those changes in the blocked windows and doorways. From the balcony you can look over what was once one of the largest and most important harbours in the country. In the C16th it was England's seventh busiest port; now there is farmland where once there was sea. There are good views from the balcony in all directions, and guides to tell you what you are seeing. In the Tower are various exhibits, the newest is a replica of the gibbet with skull of John Breads. Other recent additions are a new model of the changes in the local shoreline and the Ypres Tower Embroidery, created by a team of stitchers over a period of several years and depicting the Tower's roles through nine centuries of history — as defence, private home, prison, mortuary and museum.

Court Hall Museum, Winchelsea

The Court Hall is one of the oldest buildings in Winchelsea though it was drastically restored in the 16th century. Parts of it are probably as old as the town itself and it may incorporate still earlier materials. The notable crown-post roof is 15th century and there is a fine medieval chimney. The museum is housed on the first floor of the Court Hall and features a list of Mayors of Winchelsea shown on a series of oak boards. This list, far fuller than that of most towns, is complete from 1430, and is partially complete from 1295 when Mayors first replaced the King's Bailiffs. The lower rooms were the Town Gaol in the 18th century, and are now used for meetings and functions.

St Thomas Church, Winchelsea

Winchelsea Parish Church is named in honour of St. Thomas the Martyr, Archbishop of Canterbury, who was murdered in his own Cathedral in 1170. The first recorded mention of the church of St. Thomas in Old Winchelsea came in 1215.
