Places Visited

Lincoln Cathedral

Lincoln Cathedral, Lincoln Minster, or the Cathedral Church of the Blessed Virgin Mary of Lincoln and sometimes St Mary's Cathedral, in Lincoln, England, is the seat of the Anglican Bishop of Lincoln. Construction commenced in 1072 and continued in several phases throughout the High Middle Ages. Like many of the medieval cathedrals of England it was built in the Gothic style. It was the tallest building in the world for 238 years (1311–1548), and the first building to hold that title after the Great Pyramid of Giza. The central spire collapsed in 1548 and was not rebuilt. For hundreds of years the cathedral held one of the four remaining copies of the original Magna Carta, now securely displayed in Lincoln Castle.

Lincoln Castle

Built by William the Conqueror in 1068, Lincoln Castle has stood for hundreds of years as a symbol of power and seat of justice and is currently undergoing a £22 million restoration project. The castle is home to an original copy of the Magna Carta, listed on UNESCO's Memory of the World Register, which recognises important documentary heritage worldwide.

Collection Museum

The Collection brings together an archaeology museum and the region's premier art gallery, the Usher Gallery, in the heart of historic Lincoln. People have inhabited the landscape of Lincolnshire for nearly half a million years. The archaeology gallery takes visitors on a journey through the Stone, Bronze and Iron Ages before exploring the Roman, Saxon, Viking and Medieval eras. The Usher Gallery is Lincolnshire's premier art gallery displaying a diverse collection of fine and decorative arts, including loans from national collections, and a vibrant programme of temporary exhibitions supported by the Arts Council.

Lincoln Medieval Bishops Palace

Standing almost in the shadow of Lincoln cathedral, with sweeping views over the ancient city and the countryside beyond, the medieval bishops' palace was once among the most important buildings in the country. The administrative centre of the largest diocese in medieval England, stretching from the Humber to the Thames, its architecture reflected enormous power and wealth.

Doddington Hall and Gardens

Doddington Hall is, from the outside, an Elizabethan prodigy house or mansion complete with walled courtyards and a gabled gatehouse. Located to the west of the city of Lincoln, Doddington Hall was built between 1593 and 1600 by Robert Smythson for Thomas Tailor, who was a lawyer and the Recorder to the Bishop of Lincoln, and is a grade I listed building. The facade is wide, but the house is only a single room deep at the centre. The Hall's contents, including textiles, ceramics, porcelain, furniture and pictures, reflect 400 years of unbroken family occupation. It is surrounded by 6 acres of walled and wild gardens with flowering from early spring until autumn.

National Civil War Centre

Newark was vital during the English Civil War as it lay at the crossroads of the Great North Road and the Fosse Way and provided an important crossing point over the River Trent. Parliamentary forces and their Scottish allies were desperate to oust the Royalist garrison. The last siege saw over 16,000 troops seal off the Nottinghamshire town and dam a river to stop water mills producing bread and gunpowder. An outbreak of typhus and plague added to Newark's woes as the population swelled to 6,000, creating near starvation conditions. A third of the inhabitants died and one in six buildings were destroyed. Despite this calamity, the Royalist garrison refused to surrender. They could expect no mercy if the walls were stormed. By the rules of war at the time, Newark's population would have been massacred. The six-month siege ended in May 1646. With his fortunes at breaking point, a disguised King Charles escaped from his makeshift capital of Oxford and made contact with the Scottish army assailing Newark. By surrendering to the Scottish he hoped to drive a wedge between them and their English Parliamentary allies. But they insisted that Newark must yield immediately. The King had no choice but to order the loyal garrison to lay down its arms.

Newark Castle

Newark Castle has stood proudly on the banks of the River Trent in the historic market town of Newark-on-Trent for nearly 900 years, replacing the Saxon fortified manor which was replaced after 1073 by a motte and bailey earthwork Castle built by Bishop Robert Bloet. Following Bishop Robert's death in 1123, Alexander the Magnificent, the new Bishop of Lincoln, took charge and between 1123 and 1133 rebuilt the Castle as a prominent stone structure of ornate construction. During the Baronial Wars and the English Civil War, its walls withstood five sieges but suffered considerable damage during these periods of unrest.
