Places Visited

Salts Mill

In 1853, Salts Mill was opened by Sir Titus Salt as a huge textile factory. During the peak of its production, the mill manufactured 30,000 yards of cloth every single day and was an integral aspect of both the British and global textile industry. Now the space has been transformed into a hub for art and leisure, and contains one of the largest collections of work by the Bradford born artist, David Hockney. This permanent collection displays paintings, prints and photographs dating from 1960's to the present day. Salts Mill is located in the village of Saltaire which is a UNESCO World Heritage Site and a centre of architectural and historical importance. <http://www.saltsmill.org.uk/>

Cartwright Hall

Cartwright Hall is the civic art gallery in Bradford. It was built on the former site of Manningham Hall using a gift of £40,000 donated by Samuel Lister and it is named after Edmund Cartwright. The gallery which opened in 1904 initially had a display of artworks loaned from other galleries and private collections until it was able to purchase a permanent collection of Victorian and Edwardian works using money raised by the 1904 Bradford Exhibition.

Hepworth Wakefield

The Hepworth Wakefield gallery opened in 2011 and has been described by the Independent as "one of the finest contemporary art museums in Europe". The gallery places emphasis on work from Wakefield's own art collection by artists such as Henry Moore, Ben Nicholson, Graham Sunderland, Paul Nash and LS Lowry. This is combined with exhibitions by modern artists, and rarely seen works by Barbara Hepworth. Designed by British architect David Chipperfield, the gallery is a striking example of innovative contemporary architecture and can be regarded as a work of art in itself. <http://www.hepworthwakefield.org/>
